

99 Days and A Get Up Training Program

The 99 Days and A Get Up Training Program is designed to teach the client how to make the necessary changes to first survive in the community, secondly adapt to it, and finally integrate into it. Integration into the community implies that the person will interact legally within the community, adopt broad community values and behaviors and find peace, dignity and commitment in doing so.

The 99 Days Training program is soundly based on theory and empirical knowledge, as well as 30 years of experiential insight. The program is designed to teach the practical and psycho-social skills needed by people who are about to exit a prison culture and take on the demands of community life. The overall goal of arrest-free living can only be achieved by providing a reference framework that will allow the participant to successfully manage the myriad situations that he or she will encounter upon reentry in modern society.
